Hempstead Refuses to Allow International Leaguers to Invade Territorial Rights But Gilmore Worries Not.

Same Old Story of Blindness in Keeping American Association Out of Chicago Is Told at National's Meeting.

By LOUIS A. DOUGHER.

By stendily refusing to allow the International League to invade the Broux in 1915, Harry N. Hempstead, president of the New York Giants. has given the Federal Leaguers a tremendous impetus for harm in the metropolis. Hempstead's fight against Barrow's organization prevents the minor leaguer from getting in on the ground floor. It also gives the Feds a splendid opportunity to take the place refused the Internationals. It is planned to transfer the Jerrey City club to the Bronx, in this way assisting Barrow's organization and getting in ahead on Ping and he was forced to take long stead holds out against the minor leaguers, the Feds may conclude to go into the Bronx instead of into Newark.

It will be recalled that when the American Association endenvared to make the state of the proper proportions in time to bring him back to Chicago in good playing condition. If Ping had worked a little right along during the winter he would have been in shape each make. It will be recalled that when the American Association endeavored to get into Chicago, occupying the very site now used by the Federal League, the Tubs refused to allow the transfer. Then, seeing the point, the Feds immediately got hold of the site on Sheridan avenue, erected a modern plant and last year gave the National Leaguers recognized to the state of the state some stiff opposition. This same thing is expected to take place in New York, if there is the surrender his territorial right, far enough to allow the International League to enter the Broax. Bodie had a good appetite, which he did not try to hold down at any time. If he had kept himself on a diet he would have had very little trouble with his weight. As a minor leaguer he should be a success for a time until he gets too heavy to play at all. Bodie's failure as a hitter last summer was nothing more than his inability to get down to normal weight. His arms would not swing in the right place because of the fat.

As a sign of the changed conditions in baseball, look at the trouble the Boston and Philadelphia National League clubs have had to close St. Looey fans are opposed to the deal sending Sherwood Magee to the world's champions. In the old the Browns maintaining a strict days Pat Moran and George Stallings would have gone into a nearby neutrality during the 1915 pennant cafe, ordered a couple, and discussed just what they would do. Stallings would have decided to send Smith, Jones, and White to the Phillies in return for Magee. Moran would have accepted the trio. Then Moran would have ordered Magee to report to the Braves and Stallings would have ordered Smith, Jones, and White to report to the Phillies. Bingo, the deed would be done.

But in these latter days the "baseball slaves" are handled differently. Look at this Magee case, for example. Magee himself is willing to go to the world's champions. Who wouldn't? But how about Smith. Jones, and White? They can't see themselves being pried off the title holders, so they howl. Harvard's annual report shows that 1.823 students are participating in some kind of athletics. Football, track and rowing occupies the attention of most of those engaged in sport at Cambridge. With approximately 5,000 students at the university, those taking part in athletics make up a goodly proportion. If the same ratio was seen at every other university and college in the country, the United States would resemble some great training camp from one end of the year to the other.
